The proposed law cantained a number of excelent provisions that would greatly promote the general welfare of the State and give publicity to the acts of the State officers and the proceedings of the courts. The subject should engage the attention of our State Legislature. The existing laws in relation to official and legal advertisements were sufficient for the times in which they were first enseted, but they are very inadequate to the demands of the present, and are far behind the progressive spirit of the age. he last tution of banks was twofold-to furnish a reulating medium representing gold and silver, bu less cumbersome and more abandant than coin, and also to afford accommodation by way of loans and exchange to the lustness part of the community. In a crisis like the present the first duty of the redeem their notes dollar for dollar in gold and silver. In order to do this at any moment, they are essarily compelled to curtail to a great exter and in many instances to suspend altogether their accommodations in discounts and exchange. A very lttle reflection will suffice to convince any reasonable man that it will be impossible for a bank, that he required to keep in its vaults sufficient specie to reeem its whole circulation at any moment, to afford he same facilities to borrowers that may be exten ed in the ordinary course of business. Although every do lar loaned by a bank may be loaned to good, prompt-paying, and solvent borrowers at sirty, sixty, and ninety days, and the safe debts certainly to be paid may be much mor lation, if the bank should at such a mor be suddenly called upon to retire its circulation, it would be forced to suspend. Hence, in an emergency like the present, when the banks are liable at any moment to be subjected to a run upon them ance, is the basis of our exchange, but the menns to move it forward and place it in market so as to obtain returns for it are not attainable while the banks are thus kept in check and prevented from extending the usual facilities to the trade by which the means of transportation for the produce may be supplied. It is classly then to the interest of all classes of the committity, as soon as possible, to relieve the lanks from these apprehensions of a run upon them. This cannot be done while all sorts of bank notes, however. The news from Chili is unimportant. The revocr good and solvent the banks may be, are ponred into the hands of brokers, who in turn are compelled to send them to the banks for redemption. The brokers are thus enabled to make a profit, but all other business is rendered stagnant, and the produce is left unmoved from the granaries of the formers.

The people have it in their power in a great measure to avoid these difficulties and to relieve the banks from the pressure to which they are unnecesbanks from the pressure to which they are unnecessarily subjected. If they would as far as possible retain the money they have of the solvent banks, and keep it out of the hands of the brokers. by retain the money they have of the solvent banks, and keep it out of the hands of the brokers, by whom it is sent home to the banks for redemption in ecie, confidence would be restored, and the banks, bank notes at once into coin, the "hard times" must necessarily become worse and worse, and the disastrous consequences of the pain will be greatly exsggerated. We find in Thompson'a Bank Note Reporter for October 1st the following excellent advice: "Yon who hold bank notes lay them by and keep out of the broker' a shop, unless yon must convert in order to pay your debts. You lose more by getting shaved than yon would by broken banks, if you keep quiet." When it is remembered that most of the lanks that have suspended have a large surplus of assets and will probably in a short time pay dollar for dollar, and also that the brokers would not purchase these notes except to make a profit upon them, the soundness of this advice will be apparent.

The same arrangement with the principal publishers in the United States to furnish papers and periodicules at the owest prices.
